

METHODOLOGY CONSOLIDATED BIBLE

- The Consolidated Bible is an Inline-Interlinear Bible of the Greek OT and NT, translated simultaneously into 3 languages. This provides not only a better balance and harmonization between the translations, but more importantly does away with many of the 'mini-traditions' within one language, caused by copying existing translations to a certain degree from one another.
- The Koine Greek is translated into English, then into the German and Spanish languages.
- Koine Greek texts of the New Testament are basically in conformity with the Nestle GNT 1904, NA28 and UBS GNT5.
- The Greek text is written in the Uncial (capital) letters, which are not only significantly more readable (cursives / small letters are de facto an intellectual disguise of the Bible and the speed of handwriting is not relevant anymore), but much more importantly the letter format used in all the manuscripts well until the 9th c. AD. The letter Sigma is written through the 'lunate C' instead of 'Σ', in the exact same way it would have been written in CHRISTOS' time on earth. The letter 'Θ' was used instead of the 'Ω' commonly used today. This is also attested through the Madaba Map (6c. AD).

All 18 commonly used diacritics (221 combinations) are neglected according to the original texts (in the book of Genesis alone, close to 28,370 diacritics had been retroactively added to the original text, meaning 18% of all letters !), and only the spacing between the words and essential punctuations are added. The order of the Greek words is conserved wherever possible, and only changed within the same part of a sentence (Moderate resegmentation). No story or paragraph titles are added (only line breaks) as this would mean adding to the Word - contrary to His clear command to not even add a single letter. Absolute purity and outmost originality are key to this translation.

- Any text not appearing in the original Bible, including all punctuation, is written in grey letters in order to make it clear that those are not part of the inspired Word. Mat 5:18 >For truly I say to you. "Even when the heaven and the world should pass away, not even one iota nor one tittle should pass from the law, until all should come to pass." <
- Avoidance of long sentences and of excessive use of commas and other forms of punctuation. Long sentences seem more intellectual, but it is unclear if CHRISTOS would favor elaborated sentence constructions over comprehensibility for the average reader.

- Precision. Avoidance of elaborated sentence creations.

Mat 8:33	Now	the ones	tending	fled	And	having gone	into	the	city

	they told	everything	especially	what had happened	to the	demon-possessed	men

- Recognition of sentence / verse patterns. Mat 7:13-14 is usually translated according to the following pattern:

>13 Enter through the narrow gate, for wide is the gate and broad the way leading to destruction, and many are the ones entering through it. 14 For narrow is the gate and afflicting the way leading to life, and few are the ones finding it. <

A logical (re-) segmentation splits verse 13 into two sentences (see e.g. the ESV which does this resegmentation), because the second part of the verse is a perfect mirror of verse 14. This resegmentation emphasizes the initial command and enables the reader to better contrast between the wide and the narrow way. It is also essential that corresponding words in both verses are translated identically and in the same word order, which sadly does not occur in all translations.

13 Enter through the narrow gate!

13 For wide is the gate and broad the way leading to destruction, and many are the ones entering through it.

14 For narrow is the gate and afflicting the way leading to life, and few are the ones finding it.

- Artificial wordings are also being avoided, e.g. 'Ekklesia' (ΕΚΚΛΗΣΙΑ, Spanish 'Iglesia' which has the correct Greek root) instead of 'Church', which has a very weak etymology and passed from an artificial word further through early German dialects, 'Good Message' instead of 'G-(d)spel'; 'Lake of Gehenna' instead of 'Hell' (Mat 5:22); 'Nations' (ΕΘΝΙΚΟC) instead of 'Gentiles', 'End of the Age' instead of the highly misleading 'Forever' (noun; ΑΙΩΝ = aion = eon), while the adjective (ΑΙΩΝΙΟC = aionios) can indeed mean 'Forever'.

Added words, such as the infamous addition of "That is why a wife ought to have a symbol of authority over ~~on~~ her head, because of the angels" (1Cor 11:10) are rigorously being 'eliminated'.

- Interpretations and interpolations are strictly avoided and should be condemned by the Christian church.

Matthew 10:4 writes about 'Simon the Canaanite (CΙΜΩΝ Ο ΚΑΝΑΝΑΙΟC, simon ho kananaios)' and we should abstain from injecting 'Simon the zealot', even though the meaning might be correct.

The same applies for the word 'Nile', which is nowhere found in the entire Bible. The Bible speaks of the 'River of Egypt', which is clearly the ancient river system on the Sinai Peninsula at the border with Canaan (Gen 15:18), and the term 'river' most certainly refers to that very same river and not to the Nile being located 300 km to the west. If THEOS intended to use certain terms, then it is not up to translators to use different terms or to add names. 'Canaanite' should remain 'Canaanite', and 'river' be 'river'. We have today dozens of commentaries for our interpretations, and to open the Bible itself for interpretations is nothing short of heresy.

- Watered down terms are strictly replaced by the original meaning, e.g. 'Fornication' instead of the watered down term 'Sexual Immorality' (here the KJV surpasses other translations); 'Unchastity' instead of the oxymoron 'Except on the ground of adultery, makes her commit adultery' (Mat 5:32); 'First Men' instead of the common 'Ancients' (Mat 5:32, ΑΡΧΑΙΟΙC always referring to the first of something, not just any ancients who might have lived thousands of years after the fact; this becomes theologically relevant in Mat 5:21 > ... it was declared to the first men: You shall not murder ...<, where a correct translation reveals the Moral Law having originated at creation (first men) and not at Mt. Sinai (ancients); see also the respective study www.fitforfaith.ca/studies/#laws).

- Close adaption of original words, when easily understood by the reader and when contributing to a deeper understanding.

'Proselytes' instead of 'converts' (Greek ΠΟΧΑΙΤΟΝ = proseluton).

'Pseudo-prophets' instead of 'false prophets' (Greek ΨΕΥΔΟΠΡΟΦΗΤΩΝ = pseudoprophetes).

'To eulogize' in variation with 'to thank / bless' (Greek ΕΥΛΟΓΕΩ = eulogeo), especially when unclear if 'thanking' or 'blessing' is meant.

'Epigraph' instead of 'inscription' (Greek ΕΠΙΓΡΑΦΗ = epigraphe).

'Talents' for the Greek ΤΑΛΑΝΤΩΝ = talanton, as surprisingly used by most translators in e.g. Mat 18:24, with the exception of some problematic translations including the word 'dollars'. But I chose to translate the word always as 'talant', in order to avoid the vast confusion the word 'talent' has historically brought about (not a gift). It is also questionable why the Latin language changed the Greek 'talanton' into 'talentum' and then resulted in the English 'talent', the German 'Talent' and the Spanish 'talento'. While it is a stretch to ~create~ a new word (English 'talant', German 'Talent' and Spanish 'talanto'), it is in the end simply a close reflection of the Greek word and a correction of the Latin deviation from its original.

When there is available an English word which is built on the Greek word stem, then we should also use it, no matter if it sounds odd or overly religious to the modern reader. The usage of words such as 'Hosanna' or 'Tetrarch' (Greek ΤΕΤΡΑΡΧΗΣ = tetrarch) has shown that the reader has no problem to get accustomed to foreign words. The usage of the word 'Presbyters' instead of a variety of mostly problematic translations ('ancestors, ancients, bishops, disciples, elders, followers, (pope), talmidim') could have avoided the vast confusion, and the abuse of the most important office in the church. Satan has achieved a colossal victory by suggesting to us that we ought to translate this word and adapt it to our current 'church culture' or even worse, to 'denominations'.

Another particular example, which has brought vast confusion in post-Reformation times opposing Works of Faith, is Mat 16:27, which translates "And then He will reward each one according to his practice." Very often the word ΠΡΑΞΙΝ (praxin) is translated with 'works', which is certainly not far from the intended meaning, but it is bizarre to translate a word which exists in many languages in the -identical- Greek form!

English	German	Spanish	Greek	Transliteration   Strong's
practice	Praxis	práctica	ΠΡΑΞΙΝ	praxin   4234

- Precise morphology. An important example is the word ΠΑΡΑΧΡΗΜΑ (parachrema, G3916), which is usually mistranslated with 'immediately', thus causing also the famous conflict of the timing of the withering of the fig tree. The word 'ΠΑΡΑ-ΧΡΗΜΑ' is composed of ΠΑΡΑ (para = beside(s), beyond, past, by ...) and ΧΡΗΜΑ (chrema = useful, of use, needed, needful ...) and consequently should be translated with 'beyond use, past usefulness, useless (short form)', or per extension 'by necessity, necessarily, as a result, in consequence, consequently, as required, by requirement'.

Verse	Translation
Mat 21:19	And the fig tree dried up beyond use [or 'past usefulness'; or 'as a result'].
Mat 21:20	... How did the fig-tree wither beyond use ?
Luk 1:64	... and his mouth was opened as a result , and his tongue, and he was speaking ...
Luk 4:39	... he rebuked the fever, and as a result it left her ...
Luk 5:25	... I say to thee, Arise [...] going on to thy house.' And consequently having risen before them ...
Luk 8:44	... touched the fringe of His garment, and as a result the issue of her blood stood.
Luk 8:47	... she was healed as a result ; and He said to her, 'Take courage, daughter, thy faith hath saved thee ...
Luk 8:55	And her spirit came back, and she arose as a result , and he directed that there be given to her to eat ...
Luk 13:13	and he laid on her [His] hands, and as a result she was set upright, and was glorifying THEOS.
Luk 18:43	And IESOUS said to him, 'Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee;' and as a result he did receive sight ...
Luk 19:11	... the reign of THEOS is consequently about to be made manifest.
Luk 22:60	and Peter said, 'Man, I have not known what thou sayest;' and as a result , while he is speaking, a cock crew.
Act 3:7	... He raised [him] up, and as a result his feet and ankles were strengthened ...
Act 5:10	... the feet of those who did bury thy husband [are] at the door, and they shall carry thee forth;' and as a result she fell down at his feet, and expired ...
Act 12:23	And the populace were shouting, 'The voice of a theoi, and not of a man;' and as a result there smote him a messenger of KYRIOS, because he did not give the glory to THEOS ...

Act 13:11 And now, lo, a hand of KYRIOS [is] upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season;’ and consequently there fell upon him a mist and darkness ...

Act 16:26 And suddenly a great earthquake came, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken, opened were as a result also all the doors, and of all - the bands were loosed.

Act 16:33 ... he did bathe [them] from the blows, and was baptized, himself and consequently all his [family].

- It would be desirable to also reflect biblical names according to Greek writing.

But a simple comparison of the modern Hebrew (which is -NOT- the biblical language, but a vocalized successor of the unvocalized Paleo-Hebrew found in the original Samaritan Pentateuch) and the inspired Greek texts already shows slight discrepancies in the respective writing. Although we should not even add one letter to the holy Word, we can certainly see a slight liberty in the spelling of names.

Greek ΦΑΡΕΣ (transliteration 'Phares') || Hebrew (transliteration 'Pāreš') || English ('Perez') || German ('Perez') || Spanish ('Fares').

Greek COΛΟΜΩΝ (transliteration 'Solomon') || Hebrew (transliteration 'šō-lō-mōh') || English ('Salomon') || German ('Salomo') || Spanish ('Salomón').

This translation, although making bold decisions in other areas, reflects the mainstream writing of the respective language, in order to reduce unnecessary confusion.

The exception is the name of Jacob (ΙΑΚΩΒ, iakob), which can by no means be translated with 'James', especially when considering that this change was made very late in history (14c. AD) and that it was directly inspired by the highly problematic Latin Vulgate. We ought to be conservative on biblical tradition, not conservative on the tradition of Bible translations.

Greek ΙΑΚΩΒ, English 'James' → 'Jacob' || German ('Jakob') || Spanish ('Jacob').

- Now this translation includes a very bold decision, to exclude the man-made term 'G-d' (which is synonymous with the word 'Goth' itself - the Germanic people and their divine Goth(s); see www.fitforfaith.ca/thenamegod) and use once again His name provided in the Greek text, namely 'THEOS'. The name 'THEOS' will appear uniformly in all 3 languages:

Greek ΘΕΟΣ (transliteration 'THEOS')

English ('G*d') || German ('G*tt') || Spanish ('Di's').

English ('THEOS') || German ('THEOS') || Spanish ('THEOS').

This consequently excludes a use of the term 'G*spel', which is even more problematic as the most naive reader of the etymology 'God-spell' (meaning the message of g*d, not good news) will notice. > EN: 'Evangelium / Good Message'; DE: 'Evangelium'; ES: 'Evangelio'. It is a mystery why the English translation deviated from most other languages in such a dramatic and highly problematic manner, and why not simply the term 'Evangelium' is being used in the English language, which would go hand-in-hand with the use e.g. of the term 'Evangelist').

Those decisions involve to go strictly against mainstream, but if we regularly discuss nuances of biblical names, we cannot give THEOS a name that is not even closely related to any biblical inspiration and go as far as to translate His name in other languages, although difficulties in pronouncing 'THEOS' in any given language have never been proven. THEOS gave Himself many names in the biblical context, but this beautiful and often descriptive variety does not generate an allowance for humans to add a name completely foreign to the Bible.

We would also never imagine changing the name of IESOUS CHRISTOS to an artificial word we find more suitable. Mat 1:16 >... of Mary, from out of whom was born IESOUS (JESUS), the One being called CHRISTOS (CHRIST) < Greek >... ΜΑΡΙΑ ΕΞ ΗC ΕΓΕΝΝΗΘΗ ΙΗΣΟΥC Ο ΑΓΙΟΜΕΝΟC ΧΡΙCΤΟC (CHRISTOS)<.

- Capital letters are used for THEOS (nouns and pronouns, e.g. His children, the Angel of KYRIOS, the Great King's city, the One, the Son of man, the Son of THEOS), for the Kingdom of Heavens, for Wisdom, the Word et al. Most translations are not linear, when e.g. translating Mat 1:21 with >She will bear a son, and you shall call his name JESUS ...< while translating Mat 8:20 with >... but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay his head<.
- Strong emphasis on the differentiation btw. Singular and Plural, e.g. Kingdom of Heavens. Just because we may not discover a difference in meaning, does not give us the allowance to align differences to a common denominator we think to be adequate. The modern Hebrew word for heaven(s) is always plural and there is no singular (called a plurale tantum). But by looking at the Greek text, we clearly see the differentiation between Singular and Plural, which we should translate accordingly (see also the word study 'Heavens' found at www.fitforfaith.ca/topics).

The need for this differentiation should especially be apparent when it comes to the Weekly Sabbath and Sabbaths of Sabbaths (Extraordinary Sabbaths), where translators often play fast and loose with the grammatical number, having historically contributed to a vast confusion (see also page #7 of the study www.fitforfaith.ca/studies/#sabbaths for a detailed comparison of the grammatical numbers).

- Strong emphasis on the surprisingly often neglected, but absolutely essential differentiation btw. Active and Passive.

The Passive in the following example is neglected in nearly all translations ('everyone who is angry ...'), but is essential for a correct understanding of the paragraph.

Mat 5:22	...	that	anyone	being enraged by	his	brother,	will be	subject	to
		ΟΤΙ	ΠΙΑC	Ο ΟΡΙΖΟΜΕΝΟC	ΤΩ	ΑΥΤΟΥ	ΑΔΕΛΦΩ	ΕCΤΑΙ	ΕΝΟΧΟC	ΤΗ
		hoti   3754	pas   3956	ho orgizomenos   3710	to	autou   846	adelpho   80	estai   2071	enochos   1777	te
	...	que	todo	el siendo enojado por	su	hermano,	será	sujeto	a
	...	dass	jeder	von seinem Bruder erzürnt	wordene	dem Gericht	unterworfen sein	wird.

The most famous example probably involves Mat 18:12, with the parable of the lost sheep. Almost no translation recognizes the passive tense of 'being led astray'. It is a very important message the Bible tells us here, because it speaks not only of a lost sheep, but of a sheep that literally was being deceived by someone else ('being deceived / seduced' is the precise translation of the word behind G4105 'planethe' and 'being led astray' is the respective parable language; the root word G4108 'planos' is a 'deceiver').

Mat 17:12	...	man	would have	a hundred	sheep,	and	one	of	them	should be led astray,
		ΑΝΘΡΩΠΩ	ΓΕΝΗΤΑΙ	ΕΚΑΤΟΝ	ΠΡΟΒΑΤΑ	ΚΑΙ	ΕΝ	ΕΞ	ΑΥΤΩΝ	ΠΛΑΝΗΘΗ
		anthropo   444	genetai   1096	hekaton   1540	probata   4263	kai   2532	hen   1520	ex   1537	auton   846	planethe   4105
	...	hombre	tuviera	cien	ovejas,	y	una	de	ellas	fuera descarriada,
	...	Mensch		hundert Schafe	hätte	und	eines	von	ihnen	irregeleitet sein sollte.

- Strong emphasis on correct Greek tenses and times, although the Greek language naturally requires flexibility in its interpretation, especially when it comes to the time of the Subjunctive and the Participle. But difficulties should never (de)motivate us, to not at least try to match the precise tense wherever possible. We must remind ourselves that it is not human reasoning (= to state that aspect always trumps time) that stands above the Word of THEOS, but that exceptions based on human reasoning or the target language should not form a general rule.

When THEOS uses in His Word a specific ending of a word indicating a specific time, then we ought to humbly follow His clear indication to translate it accordingly – if possible. It is rather not up to us to define in a specific sentence, if the time is now significant or not. Every letter, and therefore every ending of a word is highly significant, because THEOS spoke that letter! We have generally become way to liberal and way too intellectual when it comes to the Word of THEOS.

- Strong emphasis on the Subjunctive which is rarely being reflected in translations and generally not being recognized by the reader as such. It does not always sound great to write >unless your righteousness should not greatly surpass the scribes ...< (Mat 5:20), but a truthful translation is not about being great in its reproduction, but about a rendering of all the nuances THEOS intentionally made part of His Word.

While the Spanish subjunctive is very short and usually only consists of changing a single letter, the English and German subjunctive at least involve the addition of the word 'should' or 'sollte'. But shortness can never trump correctness. If THEOS chooses to use a subjunctive, then we cannot simply ignore this or translate it with 'shall', a word reserved for future tense. All over Scripture we read sentences such as if >you SHOULD forgive ..., your Father SHALL forgive also you<, resulting in the free will to choose to obey His principles and at the same time showing the absolute promise that 'the Father SHALL forgive' then. We cannot water down such important nuances by not differentiating between the condition and the promise. Therefore, the Subjunctive is absolutely essential.

The most famous example for an erroneous substitution of the Subjunctive for Present or Future Tense is John 3:14-16, which is constantly mistranslated in the German language, very often mistranslated in English, but surprisingly not in the Spanish translations.

- Strong emphasis on the Greek Participle which is regularly not being reflected in translations (e.g. 'And having noticed the multitudes, He ascended at the mountain.' Mat 5:1). It is irrelevant if Modern Greek uses participles more restrictively.

The '-ing' form is used as often as possible in the respective time, except when being forced to transfer 2Aor or 1Aor Participles to Present Participles, and except in the German language, where it is often difficult to reflect it, while being relatively straightforward in English, and especially in Spanish.

A blatant abuse of the Greek Participle is found in many translations of 1Tim 6:15 '... He who is The Blessed and Only Sovereign, the King of kings and Lord of lords', with one translation even writing 'Lords' with a capital letter! Nowhere in the Greek text is found a noun, but the participle 'ΚΥΡΙΟΣ ΤΩΝ ΚΥΡΙΕΥΟΝΤΩΝ'.

The only correct translations are 'Lord (KYRIOS) of the ones dominating' (ABP), 'Lord (KYRIOS) of those that exercise lordship' (DBY), 'Lord (KYRIOS) of them that wield lordship' (EBR). There is a significant difference between a temporal action and a permanent title. Polytheism does not begin in the minds of the readers; it begins with the words of translators.

- Strict conformity with the respective Parts of Speech. We see it sadly very often in popular translations that verbs and adjectives, adjectives and nouns, or nouns and verbs are being exchanged at will, while being avoidable in the vast majority of cases. Although many English speaking people around the world use some forms interchangeably, it is still generally wrong to do so, especially in a Bible translation!

- Avoidance of simplifications. Popular English translations sometimes exclude words when the translators conclude that this would not add value to the text (especially the ESV).

Mat	And	it followed	when	Iesous	consummated	these	sayings,	the	multitudes	were	astonished	...
7:28	And	[excluded]	when	Iesous	finished	these	sayings,	the	crowds	were	astonished	...

- Avoidance of synchronizations between quotations. Translators often have the wrong tendency to synchronize e.g. Mat 15:4 'Honor father and mother' into 'Honor your father and your mother' as it appears in the OT. While this attempt is honorable, it ignores that many of the quotations have intentional variations between the Greek OT and NT. Those differences are intentional and should be reflected as such.

- Close conformity with the original wording is preferred: 'wise men from the east' (Mat 2:1) must be interpretive in its selection of 'the east', while 'For we saw His star at its rising' (Mat 2:2) is held literal, even for the sacrifice of missing continuity of both Bible verses and having different translations for the same word.
- While a few translations such as the HSSB strictly use one unique English word for each Greek word, this translation follows the common approach to translate into as few words possible, but to choose the correct word according to the context (only words that appear in Strong's, with very few exceptions of more nuanced words), without going into personal interpretation. The Greek language is simply too different in order to only use one word.

This becomes already obvious when looking at simple words such as ΔΕ or ΚΑΙ. A unique translation of ΔΕ would compulsorily result in using the word 'and', but there are hundreds of passages where it can impossibly mean 'and' and has rather to be translated with 'also', 'but', 'now' or 'yet'. If such an adaption would not be made, either the whole meaning of the respective sentence would change, or it would be contradicting the rest of the sentence.

Another example is the word ΔΟΞΗ, which is usually translated with 'glory' when referring to THEOS. Nevertheless, many translators chose the same translation when referring to the glory of Solomon (Mat 6:28), while only few translators intentionally chose the equally suitable word 'splendor', in order to not take away from the glory of THEOS, which no human can even bear in part.

A last example is the word ΒΑΛΛΩ, which can be translated with 'throwing your pearls before the swine' (Mat 7:6), 'should be cast into Gehenna' (Mat 5:29) 'pour new wine' (Mat 9:17). We can neither throw wine nor can we be poured into Gehenna.

- No adaptation of idioms. Many translations are inclined to render the biblical text in an idiomatic fashion to make it more accessible to the modern reader, yet they do so at the cost of obscuring the underlying source text, continually perplexing the reader as to whether the translation faithfully renders what is actually written.
- For the English translation, I compare existing translations such as the Apostolic Bible Polyglot (ABP), English Standard Version (ESV; secondary and only as inspiration for modern English), Greek Interlinear Bible (Marvel.Bible / Scripture4All), Green's Literal Translation (LIT), King James (KJV; secondary), Rotherham (EBR) and Young's Literal Translation / Literal Standard Version (YLT / LSV).
- The German text is translated while constantly comparing the Elberfelder (ELBBK), Leonberger Bibel (LEO) and Schlachter (SLT).
- Spanish texts used for comparison are the Biblia de las Américas (LBLA), Nueva Biblia de las Américas (NBLA), Biblia Reina Valera (RVR1960 and RV2020), La Biblia Textual (BTX) and Nueva Versión Internacional (NVI). No use of 'Vosotros' (only very limited use in parts of Spain, but traditionally used in most Bible translations), most Spanish speakers use 'Ustedes'.
- This translation sets out to prove that readability and an outmost literal translation can indeed go hand in hand. It requires a work of usually ~2 hours for one Bible verse in all languages (extremes are 0.5 hours for partly repetitive, and up to 4 hours for long and complicated Bible verses), but a nuanced translation is worth the effort. Whenever I do not achieve a breakthrough with a specific word, I pray to the Giver of the Word and have never failed to see the solution for a wonderful translation in the very same hour.
- Information on the Old Testament will follow as soon as I will begin its translation in the years to come.
- The Apocrypha, which was mostly written in Hebrew, was never part of the inspired Word and will therefore not be included. The first 5 books had been initiated during the translation of the Greek Pentateuch (LXX, ~250 BC), but the first 11 apocryphal books had only been completed by the time of CHRISTOS and therefore 140 years after the completion of the Greek Old Testament (~140 BC), while the full number of 14 apocryphal books had only been completed by 100 AD, approx. 240 years after the Greek OT. ## Translation process

1. Creation of paradigms / conjugation charts, of both verbs and participles (as found at www.fitforfaith.ca/consolidated).
2. Conversion of Greek minuscule / letter case into Uncial script, and removal of all 18 (221) diacritics.
3. Creation of internal worksheet; with vertical (split) columns; for easy comparison of 3 Greek scripts, 7 English translations, 3 German translations and 5 Spanish translations.
4. Comparison of Greek texts where textual variants occur. Usually, the NA28 is given priority, with some exceptions.
5. Creation of Greek transliteration.
6. Addition of Strong's codes.
7. Proofreading of transliteration and Strong's codes.
8. Translation into English, then German and Spanish language.
9. Proofreading #1.
10. Transposition of vertical columns into horizontal tables and insertion into Word.
11. Order parts of sentences where each language has different orders, with the main order following the Greek & English text.
12. Formatting process.
13. Proofreading #2.
14. Online publication.
15. Proofreading #3 of online publication.
